

Appropriate Duties within a School Counselor's Role

South Dakota school counselors are trained to help students succeed in school and plan their career. Through a comprehensive school counseling program, school counselors can use data-informed interventions and supports to help students succeed and support a healthy school culture. Non-counseling duties take away from a counselor's ability to meet student needs.

This document is intended as a best practice guide for school counselors, administrators, and teachers as they discuss the best division of duties within a school building. Please note, the South Dakota Department of Education does not mandate appropriate duties for school counselors.

Suggested guiding questions:

1. Does this duty create an opportunity gap for students?
2. Does this duty require a master's degree in school counseling?
3. Is this a responsibility that all staff members take equal turns sharing?

Why are Appropriate School Counselor Duties Important?

- School counseling services are available to all students. Non-counseling duties may create an opportunity gap limiting access to services.
- Providing long-term therapy is outside of the scope of school counselors' training and expertise.
- Non-counseling duties hinder providing direct and indirect student services.
